

I am writing in response to: FCC Rules and Regulations Implementing the Telephone Consumer Protection Act of 1991 - CG Docket No. 02-278

I have been employed by Interactive Teleservices Corporation for about 6 years. I feel that the national do not call registry is not needed. There are several state registries in place as well as company specific lists. The national DNC in tandem with the other proposed restrictions are likely to cause serveral reputable companies to close their doors. This will cause an increase in unemployment, welfare, and the cost of the goods and services. In my opinion, there should be stricter enforcement of the current set of guidelines and DNC lists instead of a tax draining national registry. If there was an increase in enforcement on existing guidelines the focus would be on stopping the fraudulent companies instead of hindering companies like the one I work for.
